

Extend The Patio Season Bu Purchasing Propane Patio Heater

If you have a patio or outdoor living area, you know how much space that can add to your home. Outdoor living areas are now being furnished with weather resistant furniture that allows you to do more of your living enjoying the fresh air. Outdoor living on your patio can start to get too cold as the winter If you want to enjoy your outdoor living area for a longer time, consider adding a propane patio heater.

If you live in an area where nights are very cool, even during the summer, you may find that a patio heater allows you to spend more hours outside enjoying your patio in early mornings or late evenings.

There are several styles of propane patio heaters available. Umbrella heaters have an umbrella shaped cap that directs the heat back toward the ground. In the base, there is room for the needed five gallon propane tank. The actual burner is held up in the air so that the heat does not present a danger for children.

Owners of outdoor fireplaces may be interested in installing propane logs in the fireplace to offer the necessary heat for the cooler months. The propane or gas logs do an excellent job at warming an area without all the bother of burning real wood.

You will also find propane fire pits. Fire pits may be made of metal or brick. They may be enclosed or open air. Either way, the gas provides warmth that is appreciated on the patio without the smoke or ash associated with a wood fire. There is no need to carry the firewood from to the fire pit from the wood shed to keep visitors warm. When you head in for the night, you will not be covered in the smoke of a real wood fire.

Many propane patio heaters are very effective at heating a ten by fifteen patio. If you have a larger area, you may need to invest in two or more of the heaters.

Many restaurants and bars are have installed patio heaters on their outdoor drinking and dining area. This allows them to cater to customers without breaking the new anti-smoking laws. Customers can still have a drink and go out to smoke without having to stand in the cold to smoke. This is a great way to increase your number of customers, especially those who are tired of smoking in the cold.

Restaurants will find that the patio heaters allow them to continue to use outdoor seating even when the air begins to have a little bite. Customers that prefer outdoor seating will love sitting on your patio where the walls provide a wind break and the patio heaters provide the warmth needed to enjoy a meal.

In addition to propane patio heaters, you will find that there are heaters that can be powered by natural gas or electricity. Be sure that you check out the options before making your final decision on how to heat your outdoor living spaces.
